

A message from our Artistic Director

Artistic Notes

Dear MPA Friends and Supporters,

We are delighted to be opening two new exhibitions in our MPA galleries this Thursday, Pieced Together, We are Whole and Playing with Shadows: Works by Liz Lescault—with an Opening Exhibition Reception on Thursday, January 16, 2025 at 7pm. (The collage below features pieces of work by each artist.)

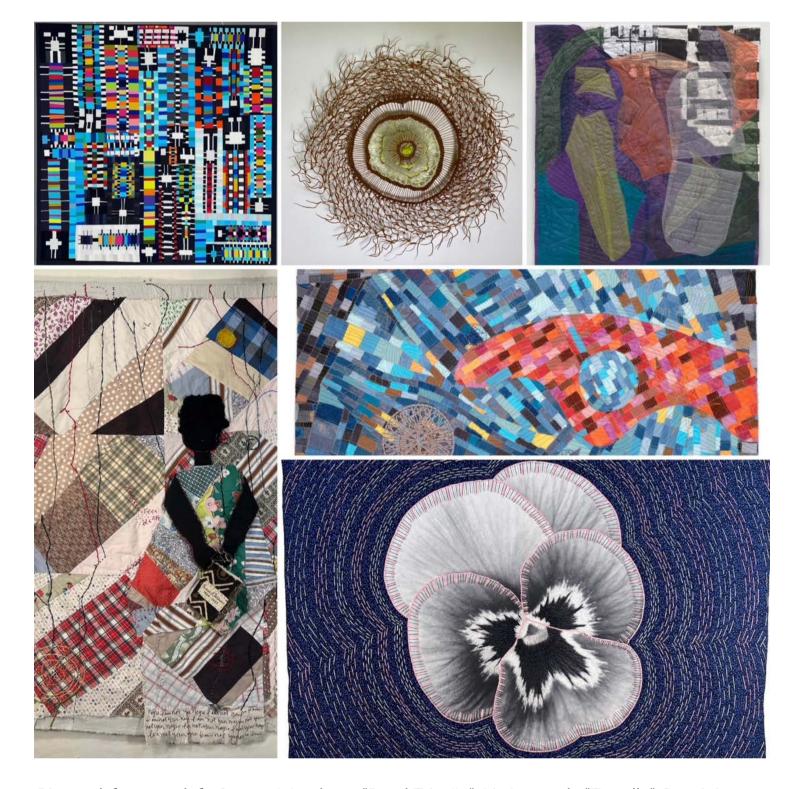

I am excited to bring together in our Emerson Gallery works by six artists in Pieced Together, We are Whole. Each is working primarily in fiber, through stitching, piecing, and otherwise bringing together materials, while also melding material, technique and ideas. The artists featured-Megan Koeppel, Susan J. Lapham, Russ Little, Dominie Nash, John Paradiso, and Imani W. Russell—all work non-traditionally within the quilting medium. Using a variety of approaches, the ideas explored are personal, political, and universal. Built into the making process, which entails the joining together of many parts to create a whole, is also the expression of ideas about communion, cohesion, gathering, blending, and building.

The plastic filament works by Liz Lescault in her Atrium Gallery solo exhibition, Playing With Shadows, are a natural complement. They echo fiber techniques like weaving and sewing, while also inventing a new way of working with a very contemporary material not often used in making art. In Playing with Shadows, Lescault's biomorphic sculptures are constructed primarily with extruded filaments, some sculptures incorporating found objects. The fine filaments create shadows that become part of the piece, sometimes indistinguishable from it. Liz is fascinated with remnants that illuminate the nature of organic entities and naturally occurring substances. Remnants and relics such as shadows, fossils and residues are a part of an object's story and can be used in discovery. Scientists use remnants to uncover the nature of objects that may no longer exist in their original form. Remnants can also explain more about the existing nature of an object, as is the case in Playing with Shadows.

In addition to the January 16 Opening Exhibition Reception, MPA will host an Artist Talk on Saturday, January 25 at 11am, and a Tea & Talk on Tuesday, February 11 at 11am. The exhibits run from January 16 - February 22, 2025. All events are free and open to the public.

We look forward to seeing you in our galleries!

With warmest regards, Nancy Sausser Artistic Director and Curator

MPA ArtReach Looks Ahead to 2025

As we begin the 2025 calendar year, MPA is excited to continue growing our MPA ArtReach program to reach our ever-expanding ArtReach community of FCPS school students, community partners, adults and seniors. ArtReach continues to focus on and prioritize our differently abled community who are making great artistic strides every week.

In 2024 alone, MPA ArtReach enriched the daily lives of 2,901 participants through 127 events. These 127 ArtReach events include virtual and in-person art classes, in-class slide lectures, as well as in-gallery tours for school age students, adults and seniors. We are also grateful to have been able to create an evergreen in-gallery / in-classroom art education booklet which engages students and adults, combining contemporary art with the Virgina Standards of Learning (SOL's) for Reading, Writing, Poetry and Drawing.

Our upcoming Winter exhibitions--which open this Thursday, January 16--will again bring Title 1 school groups into our gallery. We look forward to welcoming these students, and well as hosting return visits from SPARC Solutions and ServiceSource groups and Second Story Safe Youth Project participants. Finally, we are excited to continue providing in-depth STEAM programming of Art & Math for Special Needs populations, including classroom visits to McLean High School, Langley High School, and Langston High Alternative High School.

Your support fuels all of this incredible work, and we can't wait for what's ahead in 2025! Visit our website to make a gift in support of MPA ArtReach at www.mpaart.org.
